Craft

PAWPRINT BADGES

Make your very own skeleton picture by drawing around your hand on black paper and gluing cotton buds where your bones should be. Go natural and use sticks and stones to make your skeleton in the garden instead.

Paint your face with bright floral patterns fit for a Day of the Dead festival.

This one is sure to rattle your bones... build a silverware skeleton wind chime using spare cutlery from your kitchen draw. Attach the pieces together with string or metal loops so that they clink and tinkle in the breeze.

Get ready to glow in the dark this Halloween! Decorate a plain black outfit by gluing or sewing different coloured glow sticks down your arms and legs to represent your bones. It's sure to be a scarily good skeleton outfit.

Create a giant split pit skeleton and make his arms and legs dance! Print a template from the Internet or draw your own skeleton on white paper.

Food

Bake a whole body of salt dough skeleton bones! For an extra challenge, why not try and make every single bone in the human body in the correct shapes? Can you make 206?!

Transform normal gingerbread men into Halloween-ready skeletons using runny icing and a piping bag.

Use raw vegetables to create an edible veggie skeleton. Carrots can be easily transformed into leg and arm bones, and pepper slices make a cracking set of ribs. Bone-appetit!

Use your choice of sweet, salted or mixed popcorn to create a giant popcorn skull on your kitchen work surface. You'll need a steady hand!

Make some cake pops inspired by Jack Skellington by dipping cake balls in white icing and decorating with black skeleton faces.

Games

PAWPRINT
BADGES

Bone Match Up! Download the free skeleton bone match up pairs template resource and use it to create your own match up game. For younger children, you could use the bone halves to match capital letters to their lowercase letter. For older children and adults, why not use the bones to match skeleton jokes to their matching punchline?

Name as many different bones in the human body as you can. It's sure to be a humerus activity...

Toss hoops and rings onto the hands of skeletons sticking out of the ground.

Bone scavenger hunt. Hide salt dough bones or pictures of bones around the house and garden and then time how long it takes you to find all of the bones and put the skeleton back together.

Play a game of 'Pin the bow tie on the skeleton'.

Other

Watch an episode or two of Funny Bones on YouTube to get you into the Halloween spirit. Don't worry, this kind of funny bone doesn't hurt, but it might make you giggle!

Don't be a lazy bones! Print a diagram of the human skeleton or label up a life-size skeleton model with as many bones as you can (using post-it notes).

Listen to 'Spooky Scary Skeletons' and dance like a skeleton!

Sherlock Bones... Get your detective hat on and explore amazing facts about the human skeletal system through books and educational websites.

Visit any local museum that features real skeletons of any previously living being so that you can look closely at the bones... Why not explore the gigantic life-size dinosaur models constructed with real dinosaur bones in the Natural History Museum in London?
